

40 EX-SERVICE MEN AT OPENING OF ART SCHOOL

Classes Conducted in Illustrations for Magazines and Commercial Work.

The Illustrators' School for Disabled Soldiers at No. 10 East 41st Street was formally opened to-day with forty ex-service men who were wounded or otherwise incapacitated during the World War enrolled as students. Representatives of the Federal Board for Vocational Education and many well known artists including Charles Dana Gibson, President of the Society of Illustrators, and Charles H. Falls, originator of the idea of the school, were present.

The director of the school is W. A. Rogers, the cartoonist, and among the volunteer instructors are Charles D. Williams, Charles B. Falls, William Oberhardt, Ray Greenleaf, Edward A. Wilson, George Hillan, W. Jack Duncan, David Robinson and Leon Gordon. One of the features of to-day's opening was the taking of moving pictures of the students and instructors at work.

There is sufficient space to accommodate fifty students. At present only students enrolled under the Federal Board in District No. 2 are eligible, but it is hoped that the scope of the school will eventually become national.

The classes include both illustration for magazines and the like and commercial art work.

EDWARDS VETOES HIS OWN BEER LAW

Sees in Congress the Only Hope for the Repeal of "Un-American" Volstead Act.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Gov. Edwards issued a statement to-day, after signing the measure passed in the Assembly through Mrs. Margaret B. Laird of Essex, repealing the Edwards 3.50 Per Cent. Beer Law of last year, which read in part:

"The Volstead Act is now the law of the land, and in its definition of intoxicating liquors supersedes any State enactment. The United States Supreme Court rendered a decision that made the act of 1920, repealed by the Laird Bill, ineffective.

"In action by the Federal Congress lies the only hope of any liberalization of the un-democratic and un-American thought enacted into law by the Volstead Act."
